Under the Mango Tree By Dale Hornsby

“Two weather systems have collided,” Derek explained. “Cooler air from the Pacific against warmer air from the Gulf. It’s created a solid line of thunderstorms...We’ve run out of options. We need to reverse course and return to New Orleans while there’s still time.”

“I don’t understand,” John stammered. “You’re not suggesting, are you, that...we’re going to crash?”

Those were stunning words that seized Natalie Woodson’s undivided attention. Derek noticed her rapt gaze out of the corner of an eye. He found it immensely satisfying that this time she wasn’t going to extricate herself out of her self-imposed jam by some backroom corporate decision or by a casual snap of her fingers. No, this time she needed him, by God. Let her sweat.

Description: Natalie Woodson, a rich and beautiful, but impossibly spoiled woman, charters a flight from New York City to Costa Rica with handsome and carefree pilot, Derek Thomas. Different in every way, they develop an instant and mutual dislike for each other. When their plane crashes during a catastrophic storm enroute, they find themselves isolated on an island off the coast of Panama. Their animosity for each other soon gives way, however, as they realize that they must work together in order to survive. And when that develops into a fight for existence, they discover what they value most in life.
