Editorial Review

From Publishers Weekly

In this inane historical romance, Furana van der Rhys, daughter of the beautiful, infamous--and now retired--pirate called the Sea Siren, plans for a quiet life: she's going to become a nun. But when Luis Domingo appears at her parents' home in Spain and catches Fury's eye, she begins to realize her vocation will deny her the sensuality she had till then resisted. Nevertheless, Fury sails for Java with her hawks Gaspar and Pilar (who, among other feats, take over the wheel of the ship during a maelstrom), only to discover that her entry to the convent there has been delayed by an outbreak of fever. Luis also sails into Java, determined to track down the Siren who ruined his father years ago; his own ship too has just been plundered by a woman claiming to be the Siren. Fury, realizing that this new Siren is a fake who is besmirching the reputation of her mother (who was a nice sort of pirate, really), dons her mother's old costume and takes to the high seas to stop the impostor and, of course, explore the truth of the Siren's identity with the handsome Luis. Michaels wrote the Texas Rich trilogy.

Young and beautiful Fury van der Rhys returns to Java, accompanied by her two extremely intuitive pet hawks, to enter a convent. Twenty years earlier, her mother sought revenge for the murders of her sister and uncle by becoming the Sea Siren, the mysterious pirate who preyed upon vessels of the Dutch East India Company. Young and handsome Luis Domingo wants to avenge his father, who he believes died at the hands of the Sea Siren. And the wickedly cunning Amalie Alvarez will do anything to become wealthy: she forges a marriage certificate to claim her father's estate, kills a merchant, and assumes the identity of the Sea Siren. As she plunders ships traveling between South Africa and Java, she also tarnishes the reputation of the original Sea Siren. In this historical romance of ill-gotten riches and revenge on the high seas, Fury cannot abide this insult. Costumed as her mother, she sets sail to bring the truth to Luis and Amalie. Jennifer Henderson
